GNP publishes inspiring parables on Pinoy goings-on

And now for the good news

Pinoy expatriate leaders get together and produce a website of inspirational features on Filipino achievements

RICO Hizon: "All of us have a sense of nationalism"

By Rosana C. Burgos

HAVE YOU HAD ENOUGH of never-ending negative news that have not only affected our national self-esteem but also damaged the image of the Philippines around the world?

Then click on www.GoodNewsPilipinas.com and see how the "positive action, example and inspirational stories" of Filipinos, whether big or small, bring renewed hope and confidence to our nation.

Launched in January 2006, Good News Pilipinas (GNP) was conceptualized by a group of Filipino professionals residing in Manila, Indonesia, Singapore, Hong Kong and the United States.

"A group of friends who share the same kind of advocacy set up GNP to celebrate goodness of the Filipino and the Philippines without the politics and religious issues," says Singapore-based broadcast journalist Rico Hizon, who heads GNP. He produces, reports and presents the two daily business and 3-issue programs "Asia Business Report" on BBC World.

A Ten Outstanding Young Men awardee for Broadcast Journalism, Hizon was a former reporter of GMA 7. He is the first and only Filipino news anchor to work for two of the most prestigious global news organizations such as CNBC Asia and BBC World News.

"As a full-time broadcast journalist, I don't get to cover the Philippines that often because I cover and report on 15 Asia-Pacific economies. And the Philippines, over the past years, has not really been on the radar of international viewers and investors," Hizon says. "I love my country very much. And people have been asking me what is so good about the Philippines, so I keep explaining to them a litany of good things about our country."

Since the Internet has evolved into the ultimate research tool, people are increasingly turning to the web as their source for information. "GNP serves as the link of Filipinos from around the world to our country and to success stories of Pinoys here and abroad."

Aside from Hizon, those behind GNP include Belen Anota (Philippine ambassador to Singapore), Wilfredo Villacorta (deputy secretary general, Asean), Christine Dayrit (chair, Film Festival Commission of Film Development Council of the Philippines), writer [illegible], Margie Logarta (lifestyle and travel editor, Asia Business Traveler), Frank Fernandez (producer/anchor, Bloomberg), Michaela Hizon (managing director, Art Central Asia), Tina [illegible] (managing director, Tactics Communications), Wiggy [illegible] (director, Johnson & Johnson Singapore), Raymond Miranda (vice president, Walt Disney Asia Pacific), chef Claude Tayag, journalists Susan de Guzman and Cecile [illegible], and [illegible] (sections art director, Straits Times Singapore).

Inspiring parables

GNP which also stands for "Great Nation of Pinoys," "Giving Noble Pointers," "Genuine Notable Pure" and "Galing ng Pinoy," publishes inspiring parables on Filipino goings-on.

The website features Good News Headlines, The Good Ballot, Hot Progress, Sparkling Gold, Discover the Philippines, Art & Cultural Achievements, Entertainment Success, Technology Milestones, We Are Pinoys!, Inspirational Stories and Models of Advice. [illegible]

Columnists include immigration lawyer Michael Gurfinkel, [illegible], who writes about wealth management, and [illegible] Concepcion of "Go Negosyo."

Since GNP's launch last year, it has spread like wildfire, Hizon says. The site started with 500 hits a day. Today, it is registering an impressive 40,000 clicks a day. "People are hungry for good news. And it continues from strength to strength."

Most popular tales

Most of GNP's stories are contributed by Filipinos and foreigners married to Pinoys from the United States, Canada, Singapore, Hong Kong and Bangladesh. The site's visitors are mostly from the US, Australia, Singapore, Hong Kong and the Philippines, Hizon says.

Since Filipinos love entertainment, the site's most popular stories are the Pinoys who made it big in show biz, journalism, fashion and the arts.

GNP's stories prove that the Filipino can ol-

Along an ecological wonder

It was an unprepossessing property that a big-time developer turned into a high-end resort

Along an ecological wonder

Text and photos by Amado Ma. [illegible]
Contributor

THE 2.5-HECTARE PROPERTY, along the shores of fabled Lake Taal in Talisay, Batangas, near the Tagaytay ridge, had changed hands several times, was finally foreclosed by the bank and had become a wilderness in recent years.

The path traversing the area had coconut palm trees planted over a hundred years ago. Wild grass had grown; there were plants and vegetation all over, and monitor lizards [illegible] and snakes slithered around.

It was this unprepossessing property that a big-time real-estate developer from Talisay with an unlikely name, [illegible], and his wife [illegible], purchased in 2003 and turned into a high-end resort.

They named it Club Balai Isabel [illegible] after their daughter [illegible].

It was a fortuitous move. The area, facing the ecological wonder that is Taal Volcano, was fast becoming an eco-tourism zone. The resort is also near the poblacion of Talisay, known for its fruit-bearing trees and a major supplier of ornamental plants to Luzon and even to the Visayas.

Getting to Talisay is no problem. Through Santa Rosa, Laguna and Carmona, Cavite, the trip takes only an hour and 15 minutes if traffic is light.

At the Tagaytay Rotonda, you turn left and then [illegible] turn right to Ligaya Drive, a well-paved zigzag with subdivisions and communities along the way but still laden with trees and vegetation.

The 5-km road leads right to the town proper and the lakeshore.

Indigenous and modern

The architecture at Club Balai Isabel is both indigenous and modern. Air-conditioned rooms can accommodate [illegible] persons [illegible]. Amenities include clubhouse and infinity pool, sports and leisure
